Well-being

Good

Children communicate their wishes confidently and their needs are considered. They have good opportunities to make choices and their opinions and interests are valued. During lunch, children talk about what each of them have in their lunch boxes and staff respond with interest and care. Children enjoy spending time in large or smaller groups and make decisions about where they wish to play throughout their time at the setting.

Children feel safe, happy, and settled at Tiny Tadpoles. They enjoy the consistency of the daily routine which supports children's individual needs. Children are content throughout the session with lots of chatter amongst groups, around tables and whilst playing in the home corner or on the mat. Children enjoy the relaxed atmosphere and the opportunity to socialise together. They settle quickly in the company of visitors because they know that staff are at hand. For example, many children were chatty, offering cups of tea, and requesting that we wear bunny ears to be the same as them, demonstrating that children were comfortable and content.

Children communicate openly with each other and with staff. For example, regarding what's coming next. Interactions between children and adults are consistently good and children cooperate and engage well with their peers. Children have a sense of belonging and have formed relationships with peers and staff. They are excited to see and spend time with all staff, often being cuddled, depending on their needs.

Children are engaged in the routine of the day. They are active in their play and express enthusiasm and enjoyment whilst learning and participating in a good range of stimulating indoor play opportunities. Children initiate their own play as resources are accessible and presented at their level. For example, a group of children began playing with transport resources and tracks and were quickly engrossed, communicating confidently as they worked together to set out the resources. Children are very happy and content whilst taking part in planned activities. For example, during craft activities, children chose their own resources to decorate Easter chicks, collages and when making salt dough decorations.

Children are eager to show or talk about what they have been doing. They have opportunities to experience age-appropriate activities and resources that promote their all-round development. This enables them to follow their own interests confidently. As it had been Easter Bonnet Day, the children were excited to show their hats. Through taking part, this resulted in good feelings of achievement and high self-esteem. Children support and help each other to find different resources and have good opportunities to develop their independence skills. They take their time, to eat their food, to use the toilet and to wash their hands independently.

Care and Development

Good

Staff understand and implement policies and procedures to promote healthy lifestyles, physical activities, personal safety, and well-being. They identify and actively manage risks, and children receive consistent responses or reactions. Staff have a very good understanding of safeguarding procedures and are knowledgeable and confident in their responsibilities to protect children. Staff follow cleaning routines throughout the session with handwashing and hygiene practices implemented carefully. Children with additional needs are carefully catered for and all children's information is documented and stored confidentially. Staff follow practised routines regarding allergies and are knowledgeable regarding procedures. For example, during weekly cooking activities such as making sheep jellies for Easter, all staff are aware of adapting resources and ingredients to ensure that all risks are eliminated. Staff are efficient and knowledgeable regarding children's individual needs. For example, all accident, incident, and medication records are signed and up to date.

Interactions between staff and children are consistent, demonstrating warmth and kindness. Staff are helpful and respectful towards each other and communicate consistently, showing support and effective collaboration. For example, whilst organising the environment, clearing tables following lunches and re-setting tables for the afternoon activities. Staff ensure that children see and hear respectful practice. They are kind in all aspects of their work, empowering children to use their voices and express their wishes. For example, we heard staff asking children for their ideas, "What would you like to sing? Shall we try that?" As children responded with suggestions, they laughed and jumped with excitement, and staff responded with, "Excellent boys and girls". Staff have created a busy, happy working environment and support one another to meet the needs of children in their care.

Staff are helpful and welcome opportunities to share examples of good practice and evidence of previous activities. For example, we saw evidence of planning, activities, and experiences that children had enjoyed over previous months, such as Children in Need, Christmas play, pancake making and celebrating Chinese New Year. Staff explain the planning process in detail and show examples of current resources, activities, and themes, such as a tank of tadpoles and planned themes such as the caterpillar cycle. They also implement strategies calmly to ensure that children are supported and encouraged in their learning. Staff are sensitive to the needs and experiences of children and respond consistently to their individual needs and development. For example, when asking children to support others to find certain items, staff offer praise, "thank you for helping me to help others." Staff have a very good understanding of children's rights and promoting diversity and are committed to providing a range of play and learning activities which are age appropriate and purposeful.

They ensure that the environment is safe, secure, and well maintained both indoors and outdoors. The environment is welcoming, warm, and homely. There are clear entrance and exit points which are communicated clearly upon arrival at the setting. As the setting is located within a school building and environment, termly fire drills and evacuation procedures are carried out and all fire logs are up to date. All fire equipment is serviced and located in appropriate places. Other environment and building safety checks are complete and certificates are in place. Visitors' books at the school's main reception point and within the setting are in place and ensure the safety of everyone whilst on the premises.

The people who run the setting ensure that the environment has a good indoor play space for children to move freely and that the large outdoor space is safe and used as often as possible. They ensure that effective risk assessments are in place for several activities and areas as well as daily and weekly risks assessment sheets. A fully equipped kitchen provides storage for further resources such as a First Aid kit and can only be accessed by staff. Children are always supervised, and staff understand levels of risks and act on these accordingly. Clip boards hold a range of regulatory requirements which are completed as and when children or staff arrive or leave the setting.

The indoor playroom includes several stimulating learning areas. For example, role play in a home corner, opportunities for creative play at tables and a carpeted area, where children have access to books and construction toys. Resources are of good quality which are displayed upon and stored inside low units which children can safely access independently. The playroom leads directly into the outdoor area which offers a sheltered space as well as good equipment offering opportunities to develop physical and problem-solving skills. The outdoor area is secure and can only be accessed via a locked gate.

The people who run the setting ensure that the views of parents, staff and children are collected and considered carefully in order to maintain standards and implement continuous improvements and further developments to the service.

The people who run the setting ensure that staff ratios are correct and that all registers are maintained and correct. The management of staff over lunch time periods is implemented effectively, ensuring ratios are always maintained. Staff files include all the required information and induction processes are thorough. Staff value the opportunities provided to settle in and gain further responsibilities over time. The people who run the setting ensure that staff training is managed well, and staff are able to attend training and achieve personal goals. Staff supervisions and appraisals are purposeful and completed and stored confidentially. The team of staff is experienced, knowledgeable, and confident with the daily requirements of the setting.
