Summary

This is the first inspection for this home since the new service provider took over.

People live in a warm and well maintained home which meets their needs. People told us they are well cared for by staff and feel safe in the home. The manager ensures appropriate and individualised risk assessments and personal plans are written to guide staff in how to support people to achieve their desired outcomes. People's plans are reviewed in a timely way to keep them current. Records show staff follow personal plans for people's care and are skilled and trained to meet people's care and support needs.

The service provider has good governance arrangements in place including policies and processes, and these are followed by staff. The Responsible Individual (RI) visits the service regularly and provides good oversight of the management of the service. The manager monitors the day to day running of the service as part of their quality assurance processes. The provider has invested in the ongoing refurbishment of the service and we saw evidence of redecoration of bedrooms and communal areas already completed.

Well-being

People have choice in how they live day to day. We saw a range of food choices available to them on the menu each day, and second or third helpings of food are available if people wish. Drinks and snacks are available at any time. People can choose where to spend their time throughout the day and are able to personalise their rooms. The service provider gathers feedback from people routinely about their experiences living in the home. We saw care staff engage with people with dignity and respect. They offer gentle physical contact and encouragement to people. People told us staff are “excellent”, and if there is nothing they like on the menu staff prepare an alternative dish of their choice.

People are encouraged to do things that make them happy and keep them healthy. People have access to health care advice in a timely way. People are encouraged to participate in daily entertainment and activities. Care workers have a good relationship with people living in the home; we observed them singing with people and chatting, smiling, and laughing with them. People told us care staff support them to maintain their independence and skills as much as possible. Records show care staff support people in line with their care plans and utilise the detailed information they know about people when supporting them. We saw bilingual signage used throughout the building. The service provider’s policies and the resident guide are available in Welsh if people prefer. Visitors are welcome in the home and meet with people in communal areas or in their rooms. The manager facilitates trips out into the community if people want to go out with their visitors.

People are protected from abuse and neglect. Records show care staff receive training on how to identify and report abuse or neglect. Care workers told us they have confidence in the manager and they are approachable. Records show processes to protect vulnerable people is discussed routinely at team meetings. People told us they feel safe in the home.

People live in accommodation which meets their needs. We saw appropriate equipment available to support people’s needs. The service provider maintains the building and grounds to ensure they are safe and comfortable for people. People’s rooms contain the equipment and furniture they require. The service provider is in the process of refurbishing the entire first floor.

Care and Support

The manager gathers information from various sources to assess the suitability of the service for people wanting to move there. Once they have confirmed they can meet people's needs, the manager writes personal plans for how care staff should support people's individual needs. Care staff in the home know people well and have a good knowledge of what they like and their preferred daily routines. The manager is working to include this detailed knowledge in personal plans as part of the regular review of people's plans to ensure they are accurate.

Care staff have a good rapport with people and are kind, caring and respectful towards them. We observed care workers use gentle physical touch to guide and reassure people. Interactions between care staff and people are warm and friendly. Care staff recognise people living with dementia may need to express themselves through repetitive behaviour, vocalisation, or restless movement. We saw care staff maintain a relaxed and calm atmosphere in the home by providing support according to people's individual needs for stimulation, distraction, or reassurance. A person told us "Staff really are excellent and look after me so well"; records seen during inspection support this. We observed good moving and handling practices during our visit to the home.

There is good communication between the management and care staff regarding changes in people's needs, and personal plans are updated with changes in needs or advice from professionals as they arise. Staff told us they are able to access these changes via the electronic care record system in the home. Electronic records demonstrate robust handovers for each shift, and timely communication and liaison with professionals to ensure people's health and well-being needs are met. All this information is available to staff electronically at all times.

Records show appropriate medication management and administration practices in the home, including routine reviews of people's medication by their GP and healthcare professionals. Medication administration practice is monitored in the home by the manager, the RI, and external pharmacy professionals to ensure safe practice. Records show the manager and service provider act promptly to implement improvements identified through external audits.

The provider has policies and procedures in place to ensure the home is kept clean and to manage the risk of infection. We saw ample stocks of Personal Protective Equipment (PPE) and rotas show domestic staff are in the home each day. We saw ample stocks of cleaning and laundry supplies during our inspection visit.

Environment

The home is tastefully decorated with each lounge having a different colour theme and plenty of coordinated comfortable seating for people to use. The dining room is well laid out with multiple dining tables for smaller groups of up to four people to dine together. Tables were laid with cloths and place settings at mealtimes, which added to the dignified and pleasant dining experience for people. A drink and snack preparation area has been created in the back of the dining room, and meals are served from there after being prepared in the kitchen. We saw this works well at mealtimes as the smell of the food helps to orientate people with dementia to mealtimes and stimulate people's appetites.

Our visit was just before Christmas and we saw the lounge and dining areas were tastefully decorated with Christmas trees, lights, and other types of decorations. We saw the grounds were also decorated with lights and seasonal decorations. The manager told us the provider ensures they have a budget for decorating the home according to the seasons or celebrating different festivals, such as Easter and St David's Day.

Multiple areas of the home have been re-decorated. Flooring has also been replaced in some bedrooms, and there are other ongoing works which are underway throughout the home; the whole first floor is currently not used, but is being renovated, with changes to room layouts, all new flooring, re-decoration throughout, and a new staff room. We saw bedrooms in use on the ground floor and second floor of the home are personalised, warm, and comfortable, and contain the furniture and fixtures people need. We viewed records which showed equipment in people's rooms is serviced and maintained to ensure they remain safe to use. We observed care staff using specialist equipment safely when supporting people.

Records in the home show the provider monitors health and safety in the home through audits and acts promptly to address any issues identified through risk assessment. Specialist equipment in the home is routinely serviced and maintained. The service has a food hygiene rating of five, which is the highest award achievable. The manager ensures environmental risks to people living in the home are identified and reduced as far as possible.

Leadership and Management

The service provider has governance arrangements in place to support the smooth running of the service. There are policies and procedures in place to guide staff in how to support people effectively and safely, and these are reviewed and updated as required. The RI visits the service regularly to review records and speak to people and staff in the service. Records show the RI has systems in place to gather feedback from residents and their relatives. Their feedback is used to inform quality assurance processes and development of the service. The manager has supervision meetings with the RI and is supported by the service provider's senior management team as well. The manager conducts routine audits of the day to day running of the service as part of quality assurance processes. The outcomes of these audits, including any actions required, are monitored by the RI. There are regular meetings between the manager and the staff team to keep them informed. Feedback from staff is that the manager is very helpful and accessible.

There are appropriate numbers of staff in the home, and the manager ensures that gaps in the rota are covered. There are positions currently advertised for permanent members of staff. Records show care staff receive appropriate training and the manager monitors their compliance to ensure the right skills mix is available in the home to meet people's needs. New staff complete a thorough induction, including shadowing experienced care staff, before working independently on shift. The manager completes vetting checks on new staff prior to appointment, including registration with Social Care Wales and the disclosure barring service (DBS) checks. These checks are repeated at least yearly for all staff to ensure they remain fit to work in the service. Where agency staff are used, the manager ensures the same staff are requested for shifts to maintain continuity of care.

The service provider ensures the home is financially sustainable and that there are ample stocks of food and other necessary supplies in the home. We saw good supplies of fresh fruit and vegetables in the kitchen, and the manager confirmed they have deliveries every week including fresh meat. The manager confirmed the service provider ensures budgets are adequate for all aspects of the home and is supportive of the manager purchasing equipment and supplies as required.
