Summary

Children's wellbeing is at the centre of the setting, they feel secure, happy, and comfortable. Children form close and affectionate relationships with the child minder.

The child minder has a good understanding of how to keep children safe and healthy. She has effectively implemented new policies and procedures in response to Covid-19. The child minder loosely plans for a variety of activities which are interesting, stimulating and capture children's imagination.

The child minder is supportive and responsive to the needs of the children. She has a warm caring manner and is a good role model. The child minder promotes children's learning and development, providing activities and resources that are interesting and support children in progressing their skills.

The childminder provides a safe environment but there is scope to further enhance this area by providing a wider range of easily accessed resources.

The child minder manages the setting effectively. She works well with parents in making decisions about their child's individual care needs and provides them with daily feedback and updates. The child minder works in line with her policies and procedures; she is working towards broadening these to ensure they include pertinent details required.

Well-being

Children have good opportunities to make choices and decisions. They move around the playroom easily and select from the toys and resources, which they can access freely. Children have formed affectionate relationships with the child minder. They happily approach her for cuddles and reassurance. We saw children snuggle up to the child minder as they sat on her lap.

Children are forming positive relationships with their peers in line with their age and stage of development. Interactions are consistently positive. Children are at ease and comfortable engaging with the child minder in their play activities. They are polite, show good manners and respect resources. Children welcomed us with smiles and then settled quickly back into their activity. They have access into the garden area. Children enjoy their play we saw one child playing with vehicles on the floor, making sounds and driving them on the table and floor.

We saw the children taking part in activities including imaginative play, playing vehicles. The children were involved in choosing the activities and we saw them able to sustain their interest for a reasonable amount of time. The children were happy playing independently but also with the child minder.

Care and Development

The child minder understands her responsibilities in relation to children's safety and wellbeing. She keeps appropriate records of the administration of medication, accidents and incidents. The child minder recognises her safeguarding responsibilities and has a child protection policy with references to the procedures to follow should a referral to children's services be required. In light of Covid19, the child minder prioritises infection control, with changes made to visitor access to the home, as well as frequency of cleaning and hand washing routines.

The child minder has a written behaviour management policy and the strategies outlined in it are developmentally appropriate in line with children's level of understanding. The child minder applies a positive approach when managing behaviour, modelling appropriate behaviour herself. She told us about using distraction methods when any minor arguments occur. She praises good behaviour and offers encouragement to support children's self-esteem and confidence.

The child minder promotes children's play and learning well. She plans activities in line with children's individual needs and abilities. The child minder emphasises children's emotional well-being and provides space and time for them to develop their communication skills. She knows the children well enough to be able to understand their needs even if they cannot vocalise their feelings to her in a fluent way. The child minder's interactions with children are consistently warm and nurturing and she supports children effectively, helping them when necessary.

Environment

The child minder's home is safe and provides a secure environment for children. There are safety measures to ensure that children have limited access to some areas of the home. For example, children cannot access the upstairs of the property unsupervised, with the exception of the bathroom. The front door of the property is locked, non essential visitors do not enter the premises. An annual safety service check of the gas boiler has been conducted and certification is documented in the child minder's operational file. The child minder identifies risks and has a range of written risk assessments to ensure children's safety. She undertakes regular fire evacuation drills with the children, so they are familiar with procedures. Reviews of risk assessments on all areas used for child minding are carried out regularly.

Children benefit from a 'home from home' environment that is child friendly. The child minder's home provides an appropriate amount of space so children can play and explore in comfort and meets their needs. There is a good standard of décor throughout with sufficient natural light. Externally, there is an outdoor area, with a small area designated especially for child minding.

The child minder has a adequate array of toys and materials, which are well maintained and clean. There is a range of toys and equipment for babies/toddlers including shape sorters and musical toys. There is also a range of outdoor toys in the garden.

Leadership and Management

The child minder is aware of her responsibilities in relation to her child minding business. She has a good selection of written policies and procedures to support her setting and shares key documents with parents. The statement of purpose provides sufficient information about the setting, so parents are able to make an informed decision about its suitability for their child. Documents are stored securely, and the child minder shares her written data protection policy with parents. The child minder completes daily records in a timely manner and individual children's contracts contain relevant information.

The child minder manages her childminding business effectively. There are up to date Disclosure and Barring Service (DBS) certificates for all persons over 16 who live at the premises. The child minder informs parents in advance of closures of her service so they can make alternative childcare arrangements. She takes training and development of her practice seriously and has up to date core training. In addition, she undertakes a range of other courses to extend her knowledge of childcare issues. For example, the child minder recently completed level three training in childcare.

The child minder is committed to improving her service and actively asks for feedback from parents and children by sending out questionnaires. She is reflective and open to new ideas and ways of working to benefit the children in her care. She provides a quality-of-care report on an annual basis which includes the opinions of all those who use her service.

Recommendations to meet with the National Minimum Standards

R1. To look at further enhancing the environment to help all round development and play opportunities.
